Job summary

The COBR Directorate protects the UK from crises. Our work is varied, fast paced and always interesting. We work across the emergency management cycle, including to prepare for and resolve crises, learn lessons and make effective decisions. You will be part of COBR's National Situation Centre team, working with colleagues across government to combine data and expertise to unlock timely insights for a safe, secure and prosperous UK.

We are looking for a Technical Architect to own the data and cloud architecture for The COBR's National Situation Centre's crisis response platform. You will lead the integration of bespoke software with COTS solutions across our AWS ecosystem. This is not a developmental role; we require a seasoned architect with strong, hands-on technical skills who can immediately uplift the team's capabilities. If you have a proven track record of designing scalable data architectures this platform will provide your next major challenge.

This role supports the implementation of the National Situation Centre's commitments under HMG's Biological Security Strategy (BSS). The BSS focuses on two flagship capabilities: the National Biosurveillance Network (NBN), which is being developed on the National Situation Centre's interactive National Security Risk Assessment software RaIN; and the Biothreats Radar (BTR), which is being developed on the National Situation Centre's x-HMG DASH.
